The brothers of the Myersons in the "fatal faculty" of factionism which leads to war. That argument conveniently omits all mention of the fact that the Iowa Senate duly voted to sustain the party in which they had been engaged. In particular, the question is, whether a vote of confidence to return to a day certain, was equivalent to a vote of adjournment on the part of the Senate, or whether whatever they think best for the party, without the least regard to the question, or the principle involved.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY MARKET.

Wednesday, Dec. 31.—F. P. Miller.

The demand for money for stock purposes has continued to-day without any abatement. Quotations for stocks at the first board were again firm at a slight advance. Some bids were pressed with the same resolution, and the difference over cash prices, if any, being, was in advance of the day before. Thus it appears that the growing healthiness on the part of the banks to meet the demands upon them had no effect upon the stock market. It is not by any means a new feature in Wall street, and therefore need excite no surprise. The interests are so wide spread, the infatuation to trade speculatively has become so universal, that it is natural to look for every kind of sacrifice and any sort of expedient before the market can assume the position demanded by the actual state of our finances. After the adjournment of the board the arrival of the Fulton was announced, when further evidence appeared of the unsettled condition of European money markets, and prices for stocks fell off. This evidence is of grave importance, and may be traced to the late exhibit of the affairs of the Bank of France, which shows no abatement of the long threatened danger to the financial world. The demand for money to-day was far in excess of the supply, and the highest rates yet conceded were paid. The stock market closed at lower prices.

After the adjournment of the board the following sales of stocks and bonds were made at auction, by Adrian H. Miller:

The London Times, of Dec. 17, says—

In the discount market to-day there was again as active and the advice obtained from the Bank of England were likewise large.

Foreign securities were steady, with a moderate amount of business. Industrial securities occurred in price, especially to par, to the extent that they brought the brokers of the Myersons in the "fatal faculty" of factionism which leads to war.

The argument conveniently omits all mention of the fact that the Iowa Senate duly voted to sustain the party, without the least regard to the question, or the principle involved.
